MEWARD BOURD :- Sill, Thames, June | Among a coterie of five gamblers brought 30; Oanfa, July 14; St. Petersburg, before Mr Wise to-day, at the instance of Khio, Ghazee, 21; Anchises Brindisi, Inspector Hennessy, were two belonging to the fair sex. They, like the others, stated that they went to the gambling house, a select den in Rozario atreet, "to look for a friend. Inspector Hennessy was not the friend they were looking for. They were fined $10 each. One of the male gamblers jumped from the verandah to avoid arrest and died from the injuries he received:

An informer who assisted Inspector Horton to effect the arrest of a woman for keeping a sly brothel at Sham-sul-po had a very disagreeable experience immediately afterwards. It seems that the house was 'ruu' by a petty official in Chinese Sham-sui-po and he cried for vengence against the informer. He got satisfaction sooner than he expected. When the brothel keeper had been taken into outtody the informer very imprudently ventured into Chinese Sham-sui-po. Almost at the gate he was knocked down, kicked from Liverpool, left Singapore on the and rolled in the mud until he was in a very sorry plight. He was then taken to the house of the man interested in the brothel and chained up. Next morning he was commanded to write a letter naking for the immediate release of the woman. The receipt of this letter enabled the police to ascertain his whereabouts and he was exceedingly thankful when Inspector Hanson went to his assistance and took him out of the hands of his enemies. One carnot feel much sympathy for the misfortunes of an informer, but the case affords another inetance of the highhanded sols in which Chinese officialdom on the frontier induiges,
